One of the most striking features of Burnt Island is the "Baiting Rock," a massive boulder that has been hollowed out by centuries of wave action. This natural amphitheater once served as a gathering place for islanders and fishermen, who would use it to store bait for their lines. As you peer inside its cavernous interior, imagine the lively chatter and camaraderie that once filled the air.

Historical Tapestry: From Indigenous Roots to Modern-Day

Burnt Island's history is as rich and varied as its landscape. Archaeological evidence suggests that the island was inhabited by Mi'kmaq peoples for thousands of years before European arrival. They used the island's abundant resources for sustenance, shelter, and spiritual ceremonies.

In the 17th century, French explorers claimed the island for their king. However, it was not until the 19th century that permanent settlement began, with Scottish and Irish immigrants arriving to establish a fishing and farming community. The island's population peaked in the early 20th century, reaching over 300 residents.

As the fishing industry declined, Burnt Island's population dwindled. By the 1970s, only a handful of year-round residents remained. In 1975, the island was purchased by the Nature Conservancy of Canada, which has worked tirelessly to preserve its natural and cultural heritage.

Wildlife Wonderland: A Symphony of Life

Burnt Island is a haven for wildlife enthusiasts. Its diverse habitats support a myriad of species, from common loons and bald eagles to white-tailed deer and red squirrels. The island's rocky coastline provides an ideal breeding ground for seals and seabirds, while its spruce forests offer shelter to numerous songbirds.

One of the most notable wildlife spectacles on Burnt Island is the annual puffin nesting season. From May to August, thousands of these charming birds descend on the island to breed. Visitors can witness these comical creatures waddling along the shoreline, their colorful beaks filled with beakfuls of fish for their hungry chicks.
