CIPS books are published in both print and electronic formats and are available worldwide. They are indexed in major databases such as Scopus, Web of Science, and Google Scholar.

The Editorial Process

The editorial process for CIPS books is rigorous and transparent. All submissions are subject to double-blind peer review by experts in the field. The editorial team works closely with authors to ensure that their work meets the highest standards of scholarship and writing.

The editorial process typically takes 6-9 months from submission to publication. Authors can track the progress of their submission through the online submission system.

Submission Guidelines

Authors who are interested in submitting a proposal to CIPS should carefully review the submission guidelines.

The submission guidelines include information on:

- The types of books that CIPS publishes
- The format of the proposal
- The submission process
- The peer review process

- The publication process

Authors are encouraged to submit their proposals online.

Strategies for Successful Publishing

There are a number of things that authors can do to increase their chances of successfully publishing with CIPS.

- Develop a strong proposal. The proposal is the first step in the publishing process, and it is important to make a strong impression. The proposal should clearly and concisely describe the book's topic, target audience, and scholarly contribution.
- Write a high-quality manuscript. The manuscript is the heart of the book, and it should be written to the highest standards of scholarship and writing. The manuscript should be well-organized, well-researched, and well-written.
- Participate in the peer review process. The peer review process is an essential part of the publishing process. Authors should be responsive to the feedback of peer reviewers and be willing to make changes to their manuscript in order to improve its quality.
- Market your book. Once the book is published, it is important to market it to potential readers. Authors can do this by giving presentations, writing articles, and promoting the book on social media.

Publishing with CIPS is a rewarding experience for authors who are committed to producing high-quality research and scholarship. The editorial team is dedicated to working with authors to ensure that their work meets the highest standards and reaches the widest possible audience.

If you are a librarian or information professional who is interested in publishing your research, I encourage you to consider submitting a proposal to CIPS. I am confident that you will find the editorial team to be professional and supportive, and that you will be proud to publish your work with CIPS.
