In his late teens, Miljkovic discovered kyokushin, a full-contact karate style known for its intense physical and mental challenges. Captivated by kyokushin's emphasis on strength, endurance, and spirit, Miljkovic immersed himself in the discipline and became one of its most accomplished practitioners.

Kyokushin Career

Miljkovic's kyokushin career was marked by numerous achievements and accolades. He captured the Serbian Kyokushin National Championship multiple times and represented Serbia at various international tournaments. In 2005, he reached the finals of the prestigious European Kyokushin Championships, demonstrating his exceptional punching power and resilience.

Miljkovic's most notable success in kyokushin came at the 2007 World Kyokushin Championships in Tokyo, Japan. Facing some of the world's toughest fighters, Miljkovic fought his way to the semi-finals, where he narrowly lost to the eventual champion.

Throughout his kyokushin career, Miljkovic earned a reputation as a formidable opponent, known for his aggressive style and unwavering determination. His ability to withstand punishment and deliver powerful blows made him a feared adversary in the ring.

Transition to Kickboxing and Bare Knuckle Boxing

After achieving great success in kyokushin, Miljkovic decided to expand his horizons by competing in kickboxing and bare knuckle boxing. In 2010, he made his kickboxing debut and quickly established himself as a contender in the heavyweight division.

Miljkovic's kickboxing style was characterized by his heavy hands and exceptional footwork. He possessed a devastating left hook and a powerful right cross, which he combined with agile movement and quick reflexes. His impressive performances earned him victories over some of the top fighters in the sport.

In 2017, Miljkovic made the transition to bare knuckle boxing, a combat sport that allows fighters to compete with minimal hand protection. Miljkovic embraced the challenges of bare knuckle boxing and showcased his remarkable toughness and punching power.

Miljkovic quickly rose through the ranks in bare knuckle boxing, capturing the World Bare Knuckle Boxing Federation (WBKBF) Heavyweight Championship in 2018. He defended his title successfully on multiple occasions, establishing himself as one of the most dominant fighters in the sport.
